IMPORTANT FOR PARENTS REGARDING ANAPHYLAXIS – FOOD ALLERGIES

Research indicates that 1 in 10 babies born in Australia today will develop a food allergy. Anaphylaxis is the most severe form of allergic reaction and is potentially life threatening. It must be treated as a medical emergency, requiring immediate treatment and urgent medical attention.

Anaphylaxis is a generalised allergic reaction, which often involves more than one body system (e.g. skin, respiratory, gastro-intestinal and cardiovascular).

Parents advise us of children at our school who suffer from allergic reactions to different foods. In some cases, the level of reaction has been classified as anaphylaxis.

We’ve also been advised of cases, in other schools, where parents discover that their child suffers from a food allergy from an incident at school. The biggest contributor to these incidents is food sharing.

As a school, we’ve sought advice on the most effective way to keep children, (including those who don’t yet know they have an allergy), safe at school. The message has been clear, simple and consistent from different sources.

1. Don’t Share Food

Sharing food can expose known and unknown food allergy sufferers to foods they might have a reaction to. Food that their parents have assumed they did not touch – let alone eat. Children, fearing they might “get into trouble”, are sometimes reluctant to inform teachers, parents and/or medical help that they have shared food with the sufferer after the reaction takes place.

2. Wash Hands After Eating

Minute particles of food can remain on hands after eating time. Physical contact with a food allergy sufferer is enough to cause a reaction. Washing hands will significantly reduce this risk.

Can’t we just ban all foods that cause a reaction?

No, we can’t. It simply isn’t practical. Eggs and nuts are but two examples of the many foods that can cause allergic reactions.

“Allergy & Anaphylaxis Australia” encourage people with young children to minimise the allergen as part of an overall management plan. However they also advise us to:

“Beware of ‘banning’ of food from a school environment. Implementing this may not be realistic. Can we say peanut is ‘banned’ if so much food ‘May contain traces of peanut’? Some schools state they have ‘banned’ egg. Is this real or is it creating a false sense of security? Can we ever really completely remove nuts or egg or wheat from a school or childcare environment? There is no such thing as ‘allergen free’.

How often do places that have a ban find the allergen has inadvertently ‘slipped’ in? We certainly promote minimisation of allergens in primary schools and childcare facilities but we must not assume that a food has ever really been eradicated.”

Thus, the advice is not to share food and to wash hands after eating. Please help us by taking the time to discuss and explain these rules with your children. Thankyou for your support in the interests of our students’ well-being.

Why reading stories matters

Books help to develop your child’s language, knowledge and understanding, as they introduce young readers to a huge variety of new words and topics.

If your child is familiar with books and reading, they will be better prepared to take advantage of all learning.

Taking the time to read to your child, or introducing them to a number of different books, will make them more comfortable reading at school.

Reading is also a way for parents to spend quality time with their children and will help to build a stronger relationship between you and your child.

Children learn by example, so watching you read and talking together about reading will show your child that reading is a valuable skill and an excellent way to spend free time.
